O DR. JAMES SEYMOUR LUCKEY through whose foresight and vision and through whose untiring effort Houghton has advanced to her present standing among the colleges of the land. . . . As we look into the future it is through the eyes of Dr. Luckey that we see a Greater Houghton; a Greater Houghton which shall meet the needs of a future society not only by training the mind and the body, but also by inculcating Christian ideals and relating the student to the social order. . . . Because we wish to applaud this splendid ideal for a Greater Houghton, because we are thrilled with the plans for the future, we dedicate this book to the one who has done most to design this future of Houghton College, Dr. James Seymour Luckey.

HOUGHTON COLLEGE is looking ahead. From her inauspicious beginning a half century ago, her history reads like a tale of the pioneers, for through the vision of a devout seer, a little seminary became the nucleus for what we believe is yet to be a great university. Now as we stand in the valley between the dimming past and the yet more shadowy future, we can appreciate our heritage from yesterday and to some extent define the outline of tomorrow . . . Today we find ourselves in a changing and uncertain world. Our social and intellectual standards would amaze our forebears, while our economic and scientific achievements would seem unbelievable. Even we in the twentieth century who are accustomed to changes, vast and continuous, wherein the assurance of yesterday becomes the uncertainty of today, seem unable to find our place in the shifting scheme of things. Our tragedies of maladjustment add to the confusion. But in spite of the surrounding perplexity, Houghton College remains firm, true to the principles of those first men of vision whose faith was grounded on the Rock. The passing years have not altered that Rock, nor will they alter it, though the superstructure of the institution has been adapted to the changing order and kept in harmony with the advancing intellectual and social development of the world. Today it stands revered for its noble foundations in the past and sought out for guidance in the future. . . . The limits of human imagination are the only bounds to our conception of the Greater Houghton, but we wish to restrict ourselves to that future we can read in present trends—the future almost within our grasp. Probably the next step is material progress—a step so close that all future construction is to be undertaken with the projected campus of tomorrow in mind. Need is already felt for a more efficient administration building, a more adequate library, and separate buildings for individual departments. When these facilities are provided, there can be virtually no limit to the possibilities of the Greater Houghton. . . . Having noted the progress of the past, it is our purpose before we go on to explore the future to paint in this eleventh edition of the Boulder an accurate picture of one year, 1933-34, which is at once the fulfillment of past advancement and an indication of future trends.

THE ADMINISTRATION

Previous to the granting of the college charter in 1923 the work of the administration was carried on by President Luckey and the faculty, who were at the same time engaged in full-time teaching. Several of the present group can look back to a time when this staff numbered only seven.

At this turning point in our history a college administration was organized and with the steady progress of the new institution, administrative duties have been given greater attention. In 1928 when the courses in music received state accrediting the dean of the School of Music became a member of the staff. The dean of women now devotes her entire time to executive work, and the teaching schedules of the other deans have been lightened. With the institution of student health service, the college physician and nurse were added. In the year 1933 two important innovations were made when President Luckey appointed a cabinet, an advisory group chosen from the advisory board, and at about the same time delegated many administrative duties to permanent faculty committees.

We hope a financial manager and a publicity agent may be added to the present staff at an early date, in order that President Luckey may be free to give his thought to plans for expansion.

DIVISION OF ARTS

Department of English

Department of Music

The Arts Division possesses the principle of underlying beauty in the midst of more practical subjects. Dr. Asa S. Small heads the combination of English and Music—the finer arts.

The enlarged interest in English this year reflects the progress being made in this Department. We look back to 1922 when twenty enrolled in Soph English; to 1931 when some of our own Junior class made up Miss Rickard's favorite section A. For the present the English Department has advanced to an enrollment of nearly one hundred and has this year added a new Debating class.

With the Alumni we anticipate the years when the English Department may offer courses in philology, versification, drama, and journalism; and Houghton-schooled authors will place her name high in the literary ranks of the world.

The prodigy of the campus—the Music Department—has become the most far-reaching influence in Houghton. Installed in its new modern building, the Music Department has continued to expand in curriculum and method, so that it now enriches not only its own students but it develops the appreciative sense of the student body, faculty, and townspeople.

We look with interest to the future of this department—to the time when the whole college and vicinity will have become educated to music in its highest sense, and the present Music Department will have far outgrown its present accommodations.

DIVISION OF LANGUAGES

Department of German

Department of French

Department of Latin

Department of Greek

Houghton's foreign language division began in 1912 under Mrs. C. H. Dow, German instructor. In 1910 French was introduced and during the World War Greek replaced German. Eleven years ago Dr. P. E. Woolsey organized the French department.

The German department under Prof. LeRoy Fancher registers eighty students seeking preparation for scientific and cultural research, and has a greater future due to these modern trends.

Dr. Woolsey seeks to instill into the students of his department an appreciation of the French people and language as contributors to great world literature as well as to develop proficiency in speaking French. Visions of the future include a library of French literature, rooms fitted with modern equipment and adorned with masterpieces of French art.

Mrs. Aubrey Arlin, Latin instructor, has studied the classics in Greece and Rome. Her department has a present registration of fifty-five. A dead language, Latin yet lives in modern French, Italian and Spanish, besides being the background of civilization and folk-lore. The department would share the riches of our Latin heritage so tremendously influential upon western civilization.

Dr. Stephen Paine's Greek department registers twenty-two students interested in the language both as a classic and as a requirement for religious education. Greek courses are also taught in the theology department.

DIVISION OF SOCIAL SCIENCES

Department of Economics

Department of History

Department of Education

Department of Religious Education and Philosophy

The Division of Social Sciences under Dr. LaVay Fancher casts its broadening and practical influence over the entire student body.

The Department of Economics has proved very useful in this year of economic change. Problems arising from the NRA and the politics of the present administration have been studied and explained, thus enhancing the prominence of this division.

The History Department opens to the student the experience and knowledge of the past ages. The study of present troubles in European countries in relation to those of former years and the development of these nations throughout the centuries makes this a practical subject.

The moulding of our students for the teaching profession is the serious responsibility of the Department of Education, but the large percentage of graduates who secure positions attests its competency. The efficiency of the Physical Education section has been increased by adding Miss Moxey, a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania to the staff.

The aim of the whole college is distinctly centered in the Department of Religious Education and Philosophy. Next year the Department will assume its rightful place as a separate division and we look with eagerness to the time when Houghton College shall award her students a Bachelor of Divinity degree.

The Division of Social Sciences aims to broaden the general curriculum, and to include a Department of Sociology, thus adjusting itself to the goal of a greater Houghton.

DIVISION OF PHYSICAL SCIENCE

Department of Mathematics

Department of Chemistry

Department of Physics

Department of Botany

Department of Zoology

Since the study of science and its application is of such growing importance to modern life, it has been given an ever greater place in the college curriculum. From 1910, when there was no biology or chemistry of college grade offered, until the granting of the charter in 1923, the growth of this division was slow. The foundation had been laid, however, and from 1923 when new teachers and new courses were added, until the present time, the department has developed rapidly.

The college is now able to grant the degree of Bachelor of Science, and offers courses in general science, botany, zoology, chemistry, physics and mathematics. The entire teaching staff under Dr. Douglas have at least their masters' degrees and two have obtained their doctorates. The addition of ten student assistants has enabled this staff to carry forward its work much more efficiently. Probably the most significant indication of growth in the science and math division is the increased enrollment of candidates for science degrees.

The future of the science and math department of the school, judged in the light of its rapid growth and present standing, seems very bright. Is it to visionary to imagine a spacious science hall some day standing in the midst of our campus? At any rate, judging by past accomplishments, Houghton will continue to grow in these respects as in others and to maintain a place of equality with other colleges of its type.

SEMINARY

Fifty years ago Houghton Seminary, then a small brick structure on the other hill, first opened its doors to young people of surrounding communities. A student body of one hundred boasted but four regular faculty members besides small departments of music, art, and business, the last taught by James S. Luckey. The dreams of the founder, Willard J. Houghton, then first began fulfillment and his idea of a school based on the creation of Christian character has stood through the years. During the half century following, the location was changed, the present modern building erected, the College department separated, the seminary admitted to the Middle States Association, and a short time ago at the request of the state, the high school was made a practice school for seniors of the College preparing to teach.

Today the high school is an efficient practice school acting under the direction of Mrs. Bowen. A wide awake group of students are enrolled, participating in nearly every phase of college activity and having such separate organizations as a French club, glee clubs, gospel groups, and basketball teams of their own. Student teaching in the Seminary under the close supervision of the department heads is proving both successful and popular among students and teachers. Cooperation is producing good fellowship, a high scholastic rating in the Regents Department, and the development of high Christian standards.

Houghton Seminary will offer in succeeding years greater opportunities to increasing numbers of young people who desire not only high scholarship but definite spiritual enrichment.

EXECUTIVE LITERARY BOARD

From the publication of the first Houghton Star in 1908, the Union Literary Association was the official organ governing the publication of the "Star" and directing the annual Lecture Course. The first issue of the "Boulder" in 1924 was directed by the combined Junior classes of all departments and the Junior classes of succeeding years assumed the responsibility of its annual publication. But with the dissolution of the literary societies in 1930 in favor of departmental clubs a new management of publications became a necessity. The institution of the Executive Literary Board in 1931 by the Student Council and the Faculty was for the purpose of unifying the administration of student publications and the Lecture Course.

The president of the College with the advisors of the "Star" and the "Boulder" constitute the faculty membership. There are four student representatives: editor of the "Star"; editor of the "Boulder"; vice-president of the Student Council; and Business Manager of the Lecture Course. This group in March of each year submits to the sophomore and junior classes nominations for editor and business manager of the "Boulder." A little later, nominations for these respective positions on the "Star" staff and for the business manager of the Lecture Course are presented. The Board also constitutes the committee for selection of Lecture Course numbers.

We look forward to a day when the Board shall confine its activities to publications, extending its control over a monthly Lanthorn and a lively alumni magazine. Its personnel may then include a student member of the college as well as alumni representatives.

THE STUDENT COUNCIL

In spite of the fact that the Student Council is an organization of comparatively recent origin, in it are coalesced the progressive ideals of the institution. The former years of the Student Council have been foundation years and therefore the work accomplished has not been so spectacular nor so evident as that for which onlookers might have hoped.

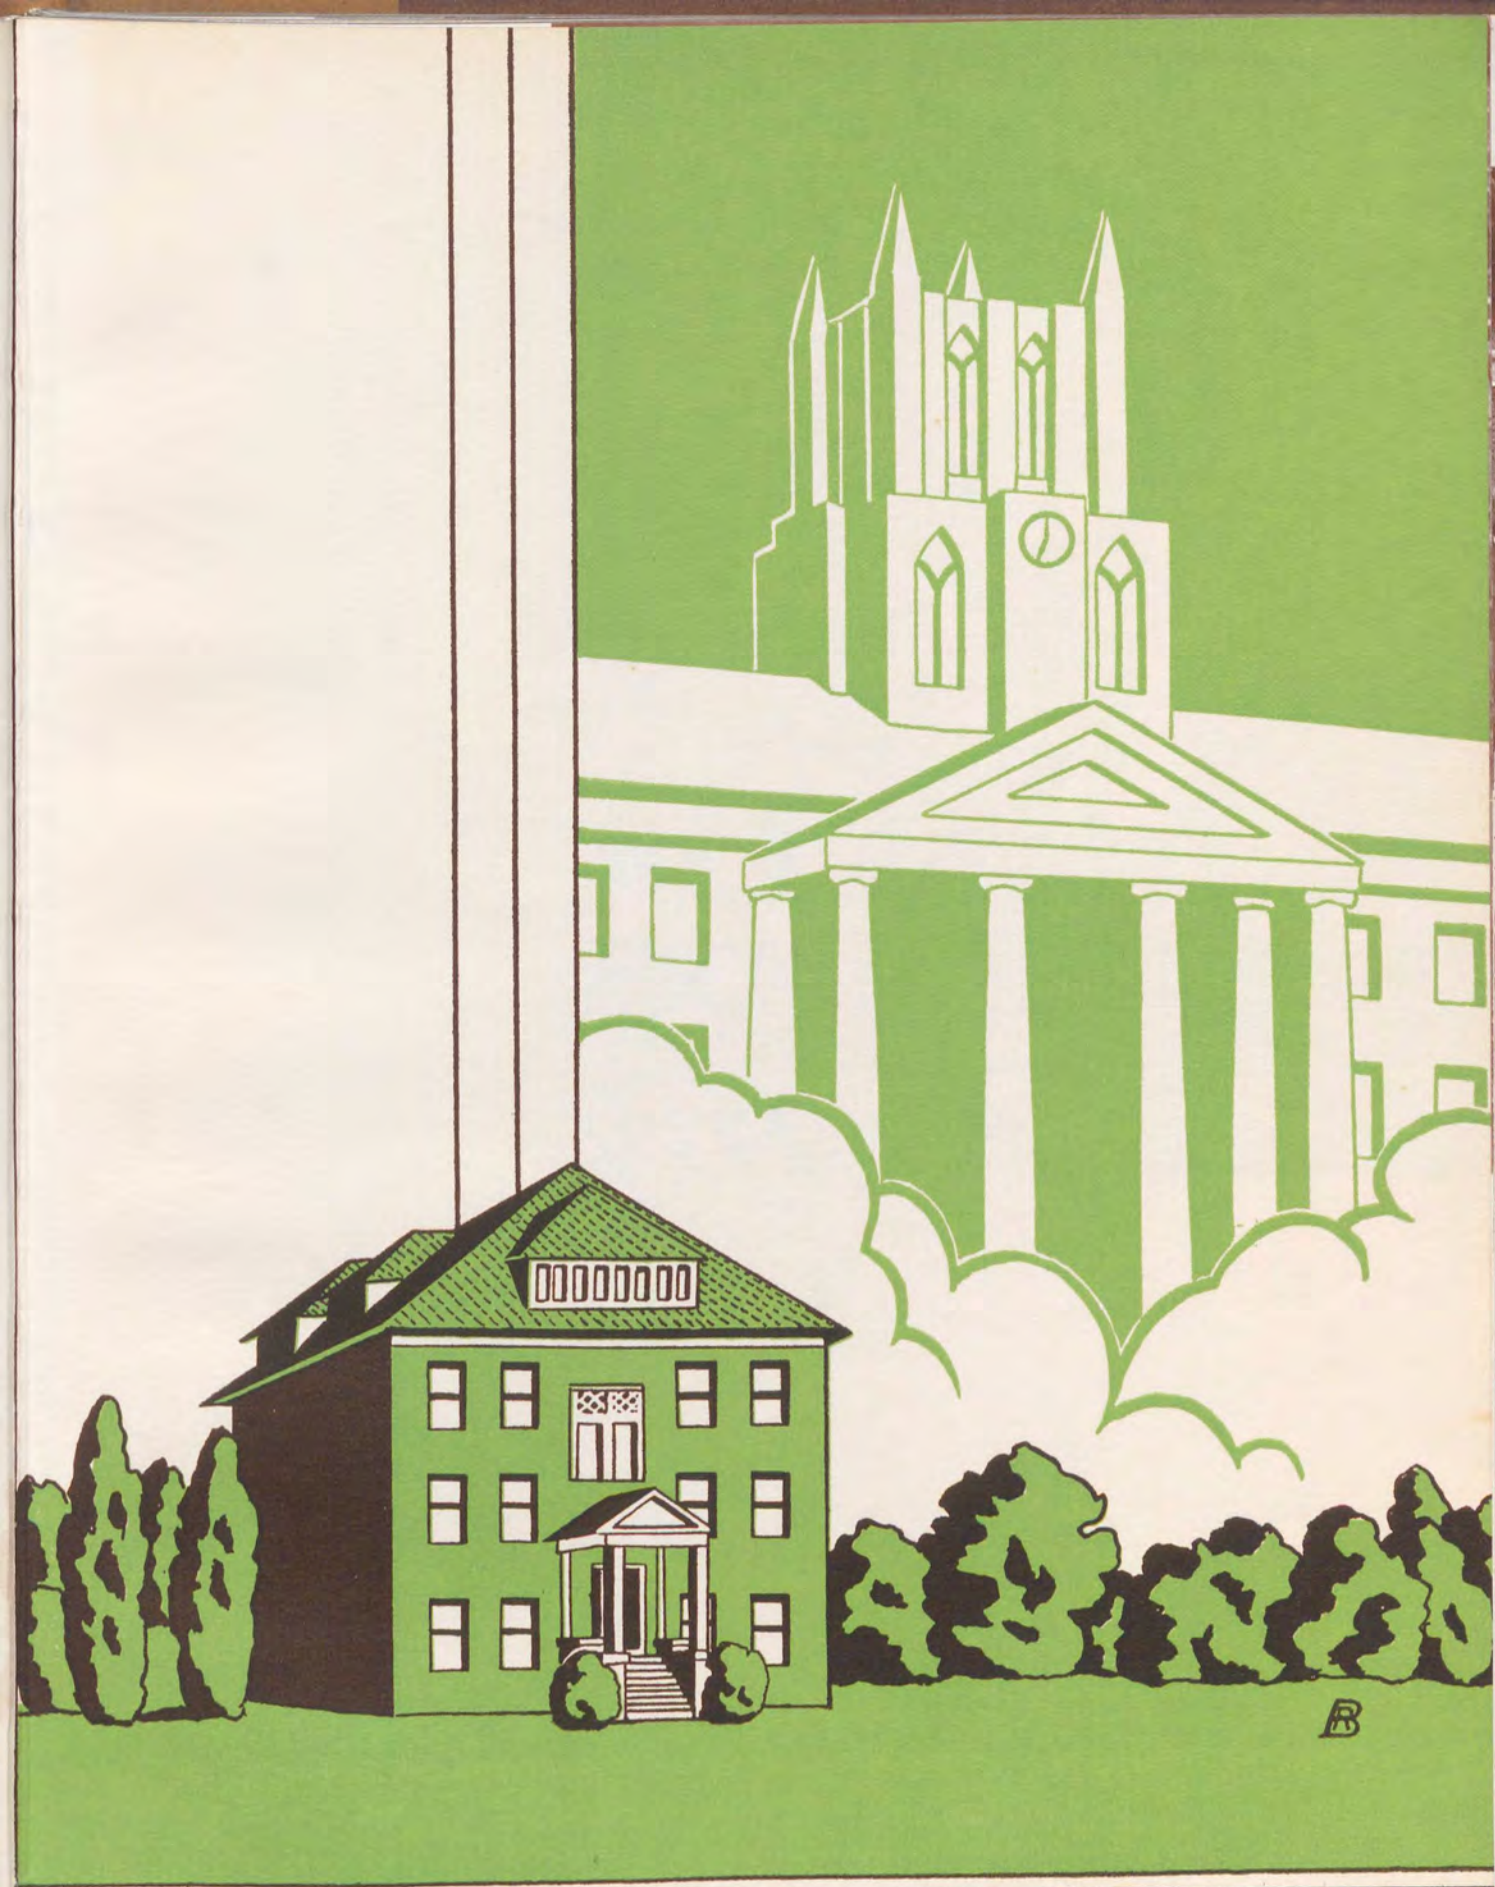

The unusual activity of the Student Council this year has been encouraged by a desire to promote a clearer understanding between the faculty and student body. The council feels that in a large measure this has been accomplished, for a committee has been given permission to attend faculty meetings and present current problems. Several problems and innovations for remedy which were proposed at the Faculty-Senior-Junior Banquet last fall have been solved in this manner. Because of an increased confidence in the organization the college authorities deemed it possible to intrust the decisions of some major disciplinary problems to the Student Council. In addition, a change in system for the "Star" for future years and a revision of the handbook have been considered.

The Student Council has without doubt planned the way toward a system of student government which it believes will be very beneficial to the college; it is for future Student Councils to build on this well-laid foundation.

THE STAR

Just a quarter century ago somebody in a little seminary started a monthly pamphlet with the aim of "portraying the life of the school in all its phases." Accordingly, as those phases broadened and grew more varied, the "Houghton Star" also expanded.

Yet, having passed thru all the stages from a monthly pamphlet to a weekly college newspaper, we find it still today portraying all the aspects of campus life. Innovations of this year have been the procuring of Intercollegiate Press service and a larger exchange. These, added to the recording of current happenings, make the "Star" a newspaper in fact as well as name. Probably the most outstanding change of the year is the incorporation of an alumni page which is taking its place as an effective means of keeping the old grads in touch with the Alma Mater and each other. The standard features—The Evangelical Student, Sports, Editorials, and Who's Who in Houghton reflect a true cross-section of student life.

It may not be too far in the future when the position of editor will be put on a competitive basis, and it takes no wild flight of the imagination to picture that individual directing the production of the "Houghton Daily Star."

THE BOULDER EDITORIAL STAFF

The Boulder since its beginning in 1924 has been a junior publication. At first it was not only a pictorial record of the year, but contained the literary productions of the college as well. In its succeeding issues it has developed into a year book of which any school could be proud.

1934 has been a difficult year in which to make financially successful the distinctive book which an enthusiastic staff and Junior class would like to have edited. Like every staff, however, we hope we have put out the acme of annuals, but we leave the final decision to the reader. No matter what the verdict, the year has been a profitable one in the fellowship found in working toward a common purpose, and the experience gained in journalistic, critical, and executive efforts.

The whole future of the Boulder is very intimately connected with the Greater Houghton of tomorrow for only as the college develops can its year book be expanded. Perhaps the day is not far off when the honor of staff membership shall be not only in the assumed responsibility but in the opportunity to display genuine talent and ingenuity in making permanent the memories of Houghton.

KEITH J. BURR

Stamp Miss Davison Smith Cronk Gannon

THE BOULDER BUSINESS STAFF

To the business manager of the Boulder is given the responsibility of choosing a staff with whom he can solve the financial problems which a year book necessarily faces. Financed by subscriptions and commercial advertising, it has been the duty of the staff to make these two endeavors paying propositions. In so far as they succeed or fail the Boulder becomes truly distinctive.

The economic conditions of today deny us the tribute we would like to pay Houghton in the Boulder of 1934, yet, despite the Depression, the willing efforts of a loyal staff have made possible what we sincerely consider the best year book in a progression of bests. The final decision must, of course, come from the reader but we leave it to him, confident that we have done our best in a time when wiser heads than ours are finding difficulty in making their business ventures financial successes.

Not unlike many of our business leaders of today we cannot definitely state what we expect to materialize tomorrow, but we are sure that the future of the Boulder will be decidedly more prosperous. In that time when finances are no longer precarious, the natural enthusiasm of the staff can be wholly turned to editing true literary monuments to Greater Houghton.

A CAPPELLA CHOIR

The A Cappella Choir was organized in the fall of 1931 under the direction of Professor Wilfred C. Bain. About forty members chosen in competition open to all college students comprised the group. During the first two years the choir showed unusual development and the spring tours were novel undertakings, long to be remembered by participants. The aim of the choir has been to sing representative church music and no music of a secular nature is studied. Besides its intrinsic worth, the choir is valuable as an advertising agency for the college.

This concert season has been a very eventful one. Since the first of February the choir has been taking week-end trips and singing in some of the most influential churches in Western New York. The spring tour which lasted eleven days was the most extensive ever taken, since the choir appeared before at least 14,000 people in its itinerary of over 1600 miles through New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Ohio. A broadcast over the nationwide hook-up from Radio City was one of the outstanding features of the tour.

Without doubt the choir has a very promising future. It is hoped that unusual voices will be attracted to the school of music and that the choir may continue to add to the prestige and fame already earned for itself and the college it represents.

ORCHESTRA

The orchestra, under the direction of Alton Cronk consists of the most well-balanced ensemble in the history of Houghton's orchestras. Each year, with its addition of new courses in the Music Department equipping students to play a larger variety of instruments and with the new talent constantly joining, the orchestra has gradually assumed the proportions of a miniature symphony.

1932-1933 marked the beginning of a series of concerts given in near-by communities and high school assemblies, in addition to two home concerts. This season has seen a continuation of these outside activities. The annual concert of Alumni week in December included a Mozart Concertino and a piano solo with string ensemble. In the spring concert, Professor Cronk played the Rubenstein Concerto with orchestra accompaniment. The addition of two French horns, flute, oboe, and typani makes this year's orchestra distinctly more professional.

The future holds promise for a still better orchestra since the instrumental department is constantly growing. Professor Cronk anticipates the time when a larger orchestra will present purely symphonic programs. With the development of the orchestra itself, a "little symphony" composed of fifteen or twenty members chosen from the large ensemble will travel in behalf of the college.

CHAPEL CHOIR

The Chapel Choir, first organized in the fall of 1932, is built on the same plan as the A Cappella Choir, and with the idea of developing material for that organization. During the last season about forty untrained voices sang without accompaniment some of the great sacred compositions of the Church. This year more extensive concerts are planned under student direction and the choir hopes to establish a reputation of good musicianship through concerts given in surrounding communities.

HOUGHTON COLLEGE QUARTET

The Houghton College Quartet, as official representative of the college, was formed three years ago to help put Houghton College before the people of the Eastern states. During the past summer, the quartet travelled some 7500 miles singing in churches, camp-meetings and Bible conferences. With its high type of gospel singing, the quartet is doing no small part toward the building of a greater Houghton.

COLLEGE BAND

Special recognition is due the newly organized band—entirely a student project. With the cooperation of others, "Dusty" Rhoades the student director, and member of the Junior class, introduced the band early in the year at a special Armistice Day service. Since then, enthusiasm has rewarded the Band's efforts. The welcome always given the Band speaks well for its future, and it is hoped that, fully uniformed, the organization will soon become the crystalizer of school spirit.

STRING QUARTET

The string quartet was organized in the fall of 1931 by Prof. Hans Sorensen, instrumental instructor at that time. During the first two years this group achieved unusual skill in concert performance. Under the leadership of Prof. King, the quartet has this year played exclusively the classical music of the chamber type and has furnished the college and surrounding communities with the purer elements which can only be accomplished by small ensembles.

RHODES KING ELLIOTT WRIGHT

WESLEYAN YOUNG PEOPLES' SOCIETY

This group was newly organized this year in an effort to coordinate the religious activities of the student body. Previously there existed several organizations having similar functions, the missionary society, the Christian Workers' Association, the Light Bearers and the old W. Y. P. S. These united into the present Wesleyan Young Peoples' Society, which has the largest membership of any student group.

Its many activities exert no small influence in the college life. Under its direction are the daily morning prayer service, the Tuesday evening students' prayer meeting, the class prayer meetings, and the young peoples' part of the Sunday evening worship in the church, beside many special services. This spring the Devotional Department introduced a very effective Easter dawn service, which is expected to become a tradition in Houghton. During the year the Extension Department has conducted an average of a service every Sunday in territory surrounding Houghton.

The aim of the Wesleyan Young People's Society is to direct in an unsectarian manner the spiritual phase of student life, by leading to a personal knowledge of God and giving opportunity for expression of that knowledge. With the coming of a greater Houghton, this group will keep pace by increasing its influence until the whole world feels the benediction of vital Christianity through the exemplary lives of Houghton Alumni.

CLUBS

THE MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION

The Ministerial Association of Houghton College and Seminary was formed in order that all students preparing for the ministry might be united into one organization. The association meets twice monthly to discuss problems of the pastorate and ways to best prepare to meet them. Social development has also been encouraged by the well-known Ministerial Banquets. The immediate success of the policies instituted makes the permanence of the organization very probable.

DER RHEINVEREIN

The German Club under the supervision of Professor LeRoy Fancher meets every two weeks for the purpose of developing a greater interest in the German people, language, and customs. Through participation in programs of German songs, Scripture readings from the German Bible, and various recitations and readings, students have come to a fuller appreciation of the language. During the past year, the club has been rather inactive, but it is believed interest will be revived again in the coming year.

PRE-MEDIC CLUB

The Pasteur Pre-Medic Club was originated in 1927, but it is only since last year that it has become one of the most enthusiastic groups on the campus. The aim is to unite in a common organization those interested in medicine, dentistry, surgery, and nursing, and to keep in touch with the latest methods of disease treatment. The work of the club is naturally of vital interest to all concerned and doubtless will continue to inspire interest in medical science.

FORENSIC UNION

The Houghton College Forensic Union was formed as a result of the interest aroused in debating by Dr. Paine. Exhibition debates in near-by high schools, the inter-class debates in chapel, and four inter-collegiate debates have been held under its auspices. The club has been accepted as a member of the New York State Debate Conference and has sent a delegation to the annual convention at Colgate University. An extensive program is being planned for next year.

LE CERCLE FRANCAIS

"Le Cercle Francais" was organized in 1932 with Dr. P. E. Woolsey as advisor. Meetings are bi-monthly with the aim of fostering interest in France, its people, literature, and art, and incidentally developing ability to speak and understand better the French language. At present the club is interesting itself in the study of customs, industries, and people of the different provinces of France. Although the club is somewhat new we anticipate the day when we may be a part of the Alliance Francaise and be entertained by native French speakers.

THE PALAEOLINGUISTS

One of the campus' youngest clubs is the Latin Club under Mrs. Aubrey Arlin's direction. The members are most active, meeting every two weeks for programs consisting mostly of the study of Roman literature and varied by Latin songs. The club aims to promote a further interest in the Latin language and the daily life, habits, customs, and character of the Roman people. The present enthusiasm indicates progress in the future for a larger and busier membership.

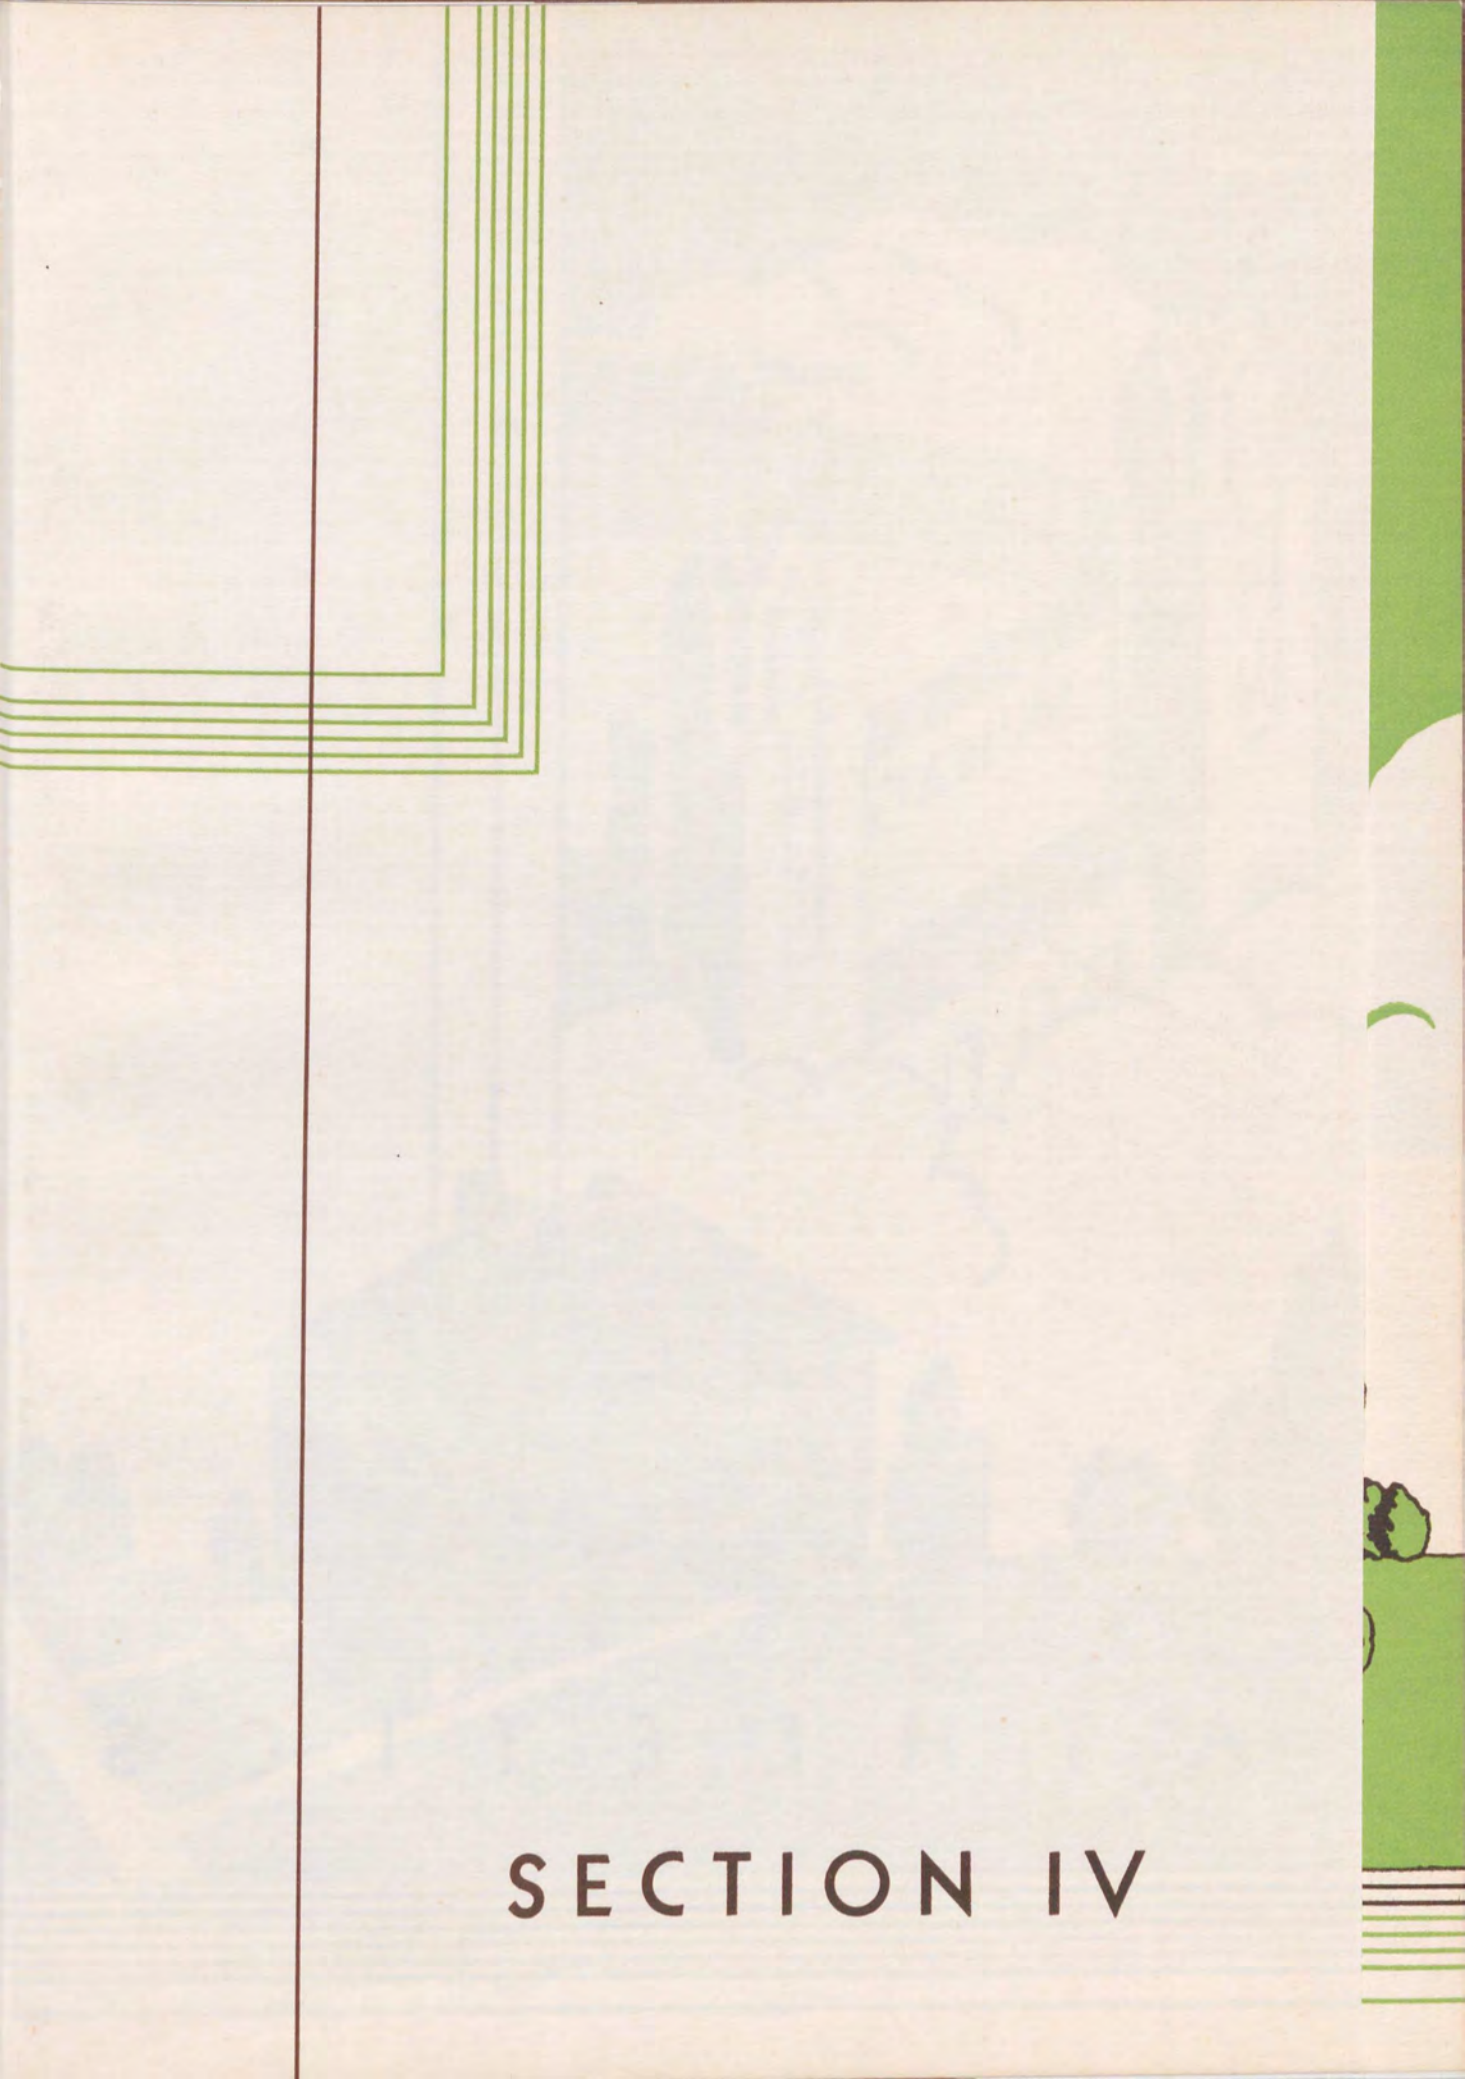

MUSIC CLUB

The music lovers in Houghton College joined in an organization in 1928 under the leadership of Professor Lawless. Regular meetings of the club are held twice a month and programs include both classical and modern music. The club aims to develop musical appreciation among its members and an increased knowledge of classical music through study of the great operatic productions. It will increasingly promote the cultural tastes of those interested in music as a vital force in society.

OWLS CLUB

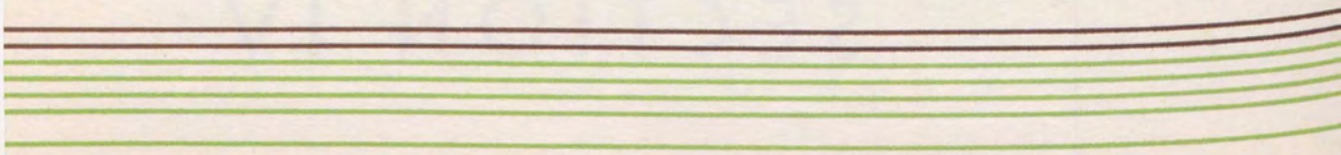

The Owls literary club was chartered in 1932 with a membership of fourteen of the most talented writers in school. The club aims to improve the journalistic quality of the "Star," to inspire literary production through the study of the masters and to stimulate literary interest in the school. The critical taste of the club will do much in the future to raise the standards of student composition and secure interest in literature as a fine art.

COACHES

In accordance with Houghton's high standards of sportsmanship, students willingly give their services as coaches of the basketball teams, a valuable training for those who intend to coach in connection with their teaching positions after graduation. Under the leadership of Professor Steese and Miss Moxey, this system has operated very efficiently during the past year. The management of each respective team is left entirely to the captain and coach, who superintend all practices, select players, and devise their own methods of play. Undoubtedly, the system will be continued in years to come, because of its efficient management.

The spring meets for the last few years have been better than average as evidenced by the number of records broken and the close scores. Despite the fact that graduation has removed some of the outstanding track stars of the past couple years, the present team with the addition of new material from the Frosh is expected to put on a fast meet. Benjamin, Pierce, Anderson, Goldberg, Van Ornum, McCarty and several others along with Colburn, Smith and other Frosh seem to be names indicative of another good year.
