Child Evangelist Speak to Students
On Monday of last week, the "Child Evan gelist", Betty Weakland, who is conductin meetings in Angelica, made us a visit. After singing two songs she spoke on the "Blood of Christ". Her message was well given and all were pleased with her sweet simplicity earnestness.

Anna Houghton Daughtes
The social hour of the Anna Houghton Daughters on April 1st was at the home o Mrs. LeRoy Fancher. The entertainment com mittee had requested the Oratory Departmen to furnish readings appropriate for the occasion The department was represented by Margaret Carnahan and Erma Anderson. The ange food cake, which was only a part of the de lightful refreshments, places Mrs. Fancher at the head of the list of famous cooks. Altho weather conditions were not favorable, a good attendance was shownotrul

Syracuse Lecturer

Dr. Bernard C. Clausen, who speaks her Friday evening, April 15, in the College Chapel, spent last summer in Europe where he visited the famous spots on the continent. Probably America could not have sent a more represen. tative man to foreign lands than Dr. Clausen. He has come back filled with enthusiasm of old world ideals garnered from that ancien civilization and has sorted out the good to build fresh inspiration for our American ideal. of manhood. Dr. Clausen, always a champion the good and true and American idealism, has helped many a young person to find his niche in life and to pursue his quest with an energy and zest that is making real, true, honrable leaders of men and women the coun ry over. In less than five years he has preach. dd to over 500,000 people in his church in Sy acuse. He was the first preacher to broadcas his sermons by radio. He is the author of many books which have been translated in for eign languages and sent around the world to hspire all people. No one can afford to mis miss an oportunity to gain a fortune. It is a fortune, not of money perhaps, but of truth.

Jip's Decision
Elsie Bacon
The last rays of a September sunset flickered on a lone cabin in the Canadian North Woods 66 the R.P. anght settled down upon this corner of wena Garmain was wearily preparing the even ing meal. As she stepped to the window to look out with a gaze of far-off discontent, the sun shone on a face beautiful in its simplicity although by beauty judges it might not have been so termed. Long, dark eye-lashes shaded the eyes of gray and her beautiful, thick chestnut hair was certainly a crowning glory, She nut hair was certainly a crowning glory. She was slight of build and medium in stature and with grace and ease. The room in which was worked was cheerful and cozy and the furnishings revealed prosperity in so lone a spor. The room was kitchen, dining room and living room combined, but being large it served very well and gave an appearance of homely comfort The walls were covered with plaster-board and ung with a few pictures.
A heavy step sounded ourside. The door wung open revealing a tall, muscular man about thirty years old. Striding in he set his anch pail on a chair and threw down his coat The removal of his cap showed his hair to be lack and his high forehead above eyes of brown. He would have been termed good lookng in any society
No word of greeting passed between Alber Garmain and his wife. When she had com pleted her work of laying the table she said, All right." As he began washing in preparaion for the meal, she sharply asked, "Why i it that you never wash before supper is all ready?" He offered no reply either in excuse or complaint and soon took his place at the "W Well, how went the day? Has time iminquired.

Do We Pray?

Sunday evening, April 3rd, our pastor gave us, by the help of the Holy Spirit, an inspiring message on prayer based on Matthew 7:7-8. He asked the question, "Why is there such difference between what the Master taugh oncerning prayer, and the unlimited assur ance that He gave, and the results which we ee?" One reason why we have not seen the esults we would like is that we have been more or less in error in the conception we have had prayer.
Prayer, according to Christ's own words, must be a process of effort. Jesus showed this in His example. He continued all night in prayer to God; He arose a great while before day. This meant effort. True prayer is a process of effort in which the ability of the body is put to its supreme test at times. The body unless quickened by the power of the Spiri will lag behind far. The Spirit indeed is will will lag behind far. The S ing, but the flesh is weak."
Th, but the flesh is weak
The unlimited assurante which we have con cerning prayer is conditioned by the help and which man alone experiences effort. which man alone experiences effort. I prayer is a process of effort, and if prayer can nly be effective as our infirmities are helped and only as the Divine Spirit makes interces sion for us, we have this infinite, blessed consolation, that the Spirit who helps us is an innitely prodigious worker.
"Not only does the Holy Spirit assist our prayers and inspire our desires, but He furnishes us in the Word of God with the mould into which we may pour the moulten ore of our desires."
Our pastor said that he did not see how any one can be successful in the prayer life who does not know the Word of God. If we have not the Spirit of God the prayers which we pray are impossible. With the Holy Spirit we ask what we ought. Through searching the Word of God we have the assurance that we have what we ask. We must know the Word of God and check by the Word of God to know if our heart's desires are according to the Word of God. If our desires can be poured into the Word and fit it, we know we are right. The Master's Word means just what it says: If we ask, we receive;
If we seek, we find;
If we knock, it shall be opened.

The Gospel of Peace

Last Sunday morning the Spirit of God was felt in a marked manner as Mr. Ernest Crocker brought a message to us from Isaiah 26:3. The subject of the message was "Peace."
When we think of peace, the opposite of peace is brought to our minds-tumult or war. Tumult brings sadness, and reigns because sin is in the world, and it will continue to reign until Christ comes again. The Word of God contains the true secret of perfect peace. In Romans $8: 6$ Paul tells us "To be spiritually minded is life and peace." As long as we are dependent upon God, we are entitled to this peace, as well as present peace.
When Christ came into the world He brought the peace which we can have for the asking. When the stormy sea tossed the ship about and it was thought all would be lost, esus arose and rebuked the winds saying, "Peace be still." Here Mr. Crocker brought in his personal testimony: "The God who spoke peace to the stormy sea, spoke peace to my tormy heart." Thank God, He still speake "Peace."
Before Jesus left $H$ is disciples He gave them he promise in John 14:27, "Peace I leave

he loved with all his heart. His eyes were sad and although her words cut him like a kniff he yearned to say something to cheer her. "Oh, why is life so hard?" he thought. she could only forget the city and love those woods and God's great out-of-doors as I do" was ever his prayer. He lived again the hou of the morning when she had expressed het "decision" which she spoke of previously. He could still hear her words.
"But, Bert, I cannot stand this-I will not You say that you can't see why I feel so. You don't try to see. Of course I said I would b happy. Then, I thought that with you- I could be content in any hole or nook of the world. But vain fancies! You could go back but you care not what happens to me. I must go!"
She rested on the couch mending some of his clothes.
"Can this be the last evening when she'l ever be doing that?" A pang shot through him at the thought.
"Have you packed anything?" he asked
"Packed? I have nothing to pack. There is nothing here I would want to take away. Oh yes, I have all that I want in a bag. I've had it ready for a week."
At this he was more fully convinced that what he had wondered about all day was true. She had planned this and had been biding her time to make it known. "Because I have been interested in my work I have not realized how miserable she was and how lonesome she must have been. I have been thoughtless, perhaps although I thought that I had been doing all that one could. I will try and be more thought-ful-but no, too late! Promises would now be in vain. Rowena's mind is made up. I may better appear content. I do not want another of this morning's scenes." These thoughts worked through his brain instead of the thoughts presented on the page before him. He could not bring himself to say that he would take her to Daron in the morning. She knew that he would if she wished. Had there knew that he would if she wished. Had there ever been a time when she had asked for money when he had not done his best to comply? No, thanks be, she could not complain of that. At last they both retired and silently crept into bed, each busy with his own thoughts. Jip slept on a rug by the stove
The marriage of Rowena and Albert Garmain had proved a happy one for the first two years but gradually the quiet, unresponsive atmosphere of the lone forest had crept into their veins and things had come up forming a barrier between them until the climax had been reached. A few months after their marriage, according to plans they had come to the place which now was their home. He had accepted a contract to work here as lumbering boss for a large tract of forest timber. A short distance from this cabin was the camp, a few buildings which served as bunk and eating houses for a large group of foresters. They had proved to be a clean gang of men and things had gone well. Their work was a big project. They had erected an immense mill and work had been prosperous. The company which had hired these men and their, leader were well satisfied with results and were ever extending their work It was a hard but good work and quitters wer not here. They had come to make good of this work and all with exceptions of two or this work and all with exceptions of two or cities had proved true. This camp was situated twenty miles from the nearest town, Daro: which with railroad and stores was the supply post for the adjoining vicinity.
Dawn and the morning sun filled the earth with gladness and sunshine. If sunshine could only have penetrated these sad, lone hearts. If they could have mutually rejoiced in life and love and looked up and found the joy which abounds for those who look for it. Rowena arose as usual at Albert's call and pre pared the morning meal while he milked their one cow. Conversation of a kindlier nature managed to float over the barrier of restrain which still persisted between them.
The morning meal over, the $\operatorname{dog}$ Jip fed, each one went about his tasks in the house. "Well, Rena, do you still want me to take you down to Nona's this morning?"
"Sure, I haven't changed my mind."
"All right, I'll give you this now," and he pulled out his purse and gave her a large roll of bills. Upon counting them while putting them in her purse she, independent as ever, and handed some of it to him
"No, Rena, please keep it all. If it is all that you can take from me I want you to have hat." Touched by his earnestness but avoiding his gaze she tucked it into her purse and ossed it into a nearby chair Unnoticed by either of them the puppy ip, scampering around as usual caused the pocket book to fall from the rocking chair and seized upon it as a very proper plaything. He an with it to the bedroom and there had grea port, finally leaving it under the bed to find some other amusement. Bert came from the amp with the old car, the mutual property of camp with the old car, the mutual property of every one and Rowena took her bag and went out. With a kindly word and pat to Jip and a out. With a kindly word and pat to Jip and a silent farewell to all the familiar things she rode away casting a goodby glance at this, he home of the past three years. "In such a life," she thought although even now her inner consciousness revealed a feeling of sadness upon eaving. She had often gone to spend a few days with Nona. This elderly lady had proven a very true friend from the day when they first met, upon Rowena's arrival in the town. "Nona enjoys this life and why cannot I?" she asked herself, "but I have tried and ailed. It is no use."
The twenty miles had stretched behind. Nona's house was reached. With a few words of farewell and a clasp of hands Bert jumped nto his car and rode away not trusting himelf to look back. The return twenty miles an I do?" he asked and always the reply, "Nothing, only work, work, always the reply Nothing, only work, work, work. Anything longer I can do nothing but let her go. I will not make it any harder for her." After returning the car he went to the work and Jip in Ohio waiting him in the woods. He had brought Ohio.
no lunch and he could not have eaten anyway. The lump in his throat was too big. At last the hours dragged by and man and dog tramped home. Home, the thought mocked him. What was it now but an empty cabin? As he prepared a scanty meal which Jip shared, the walls echoed with her voice and it did not come to him in the tone of last night and many nights before but overlooking the unpleasant hours which they had spent in the last few months his thoughts raced back to those blissful days when they had first come there, those happy evenings when a welcoming kiss and the joy of laughter was enjoyed by both. Every chair and familiar thing told of the happy times spent together 'till it seemed as if he could see her working there or sitting in the next chair What agony! His bed brought no sleep until What agony! His bed brought no sleep until the morning hours when he fell into fitful the mo dozes.
The morning brought better peace of mind and the morning's work was done while Jip ran about. The outside door was open and Jip discovering the purse, his plaything of the morning before ran with it outdoors and in true dog fashion hid it in the ground back of the house. Garmain finally trudged to work with Jip tagging at his heals. Albert had packed his lunch and although his heart was heavy his determination had strengthened to see hrough as only a man would do.
Meanwhile Rowena was in a very serious state of mind. A new light had been thrown upon her "decision" and her attitude was changing, but no thought of not going away had entered her mind. Her problem was th . Yes money. Bert had given her money ag until she retired on the night of her ar ival at Nona's. She realized that she had carelessly left it at the cabin. What should she do? She had no way of earning money and no one from whom to borrow. Nona did not ave that amount. She would go back the next ay and find her purse. The next day neighbor consented to take her there and abou As oclock her home again came into view ame over her. Bert had washed the dishe and picked things up in the kitchen but th bedroom presented a far different appearance At one glance at the unmade bed she saw that Bert who usually lay so quiet had tossed abou frightfully. To her mind this plainly told that he had not slept. She must make it and mech anically she straightened the covers thinkin (Continued on Page Three)

Scenic Switzerland President Luckey, Members of Students of Houghton College: Students of Houghton College:
When I was agtending Hought When I was attending Houghton College I remember that we used to have some excep tionally fine chapel speeches. But once in a great while we used to have the opportunity of listening to one of those grave and venerable personages who had circumnavigated the globe.
Then I would always think of Magellan and wish that I had lived in his time that I might listen by the hour to the engrossing tales of in trepid voyagers.
As I was debating today on what subject should address you, I decided to describe to you something of the beauties of Switzerland In all my travels I think I have visited no place more wonderful than this country. Its beautiful deep blue lakes of shining water mighty clitts, its magnificent glaciers and thundering ing, 1 mes the dering waterfalls, and best of all, the grandeu measured miles of measured miles of snow, towering up among the clouds, storming the very heights of heaven One of the most atractive gateways to this land of mountains is fiterlaken. All tourists in Switzerland come hither. As its name indicates, it lies between two famous lakes which rival one another in respect to beauty Before it, also, are the charming vales of Lauterbrennen and Grindewald, which lead one into the very heart of the Bermese Ober land. Moreover, from 60,000 to 80,000 peo ple come here yearly to render homage to the peerless sovereign who holds court at Inter laken. There is no need to name the peak to which I thus allude, for everywhere in Inter laken we discern the crowning glory of the place-beside which all others fade-the lovely Jungfrau, queen of Alpine heights. Her grand resplendent form fills the entire space between the encircling peaks, and forms a dazzling centerpiece of ice and snow, nearly 14,000 feet in height. It is never-ending pleasure to rest upon the broad piazzas of Interlaken's palatial hotels, and gaze upon this radiant mount. It sometimes looks like a great white cloud for emer anchored in one place, but oftener it ene ever anchored in one place, but oftener ir sparkles with a robe of diamonds, mantled, as sparkles with a robe of diamonds, mantled, as it is, with snows of virgin purity from base to it is, with snows of virgin purity from base to heaven-piercing summit.
The charming and romantic vale of Lauter brennen, which is only a half mile in width, is bounded on both sides by lofty mountains over which the winter's sun can hardly climb till midday, and yer luxuriant vegetation covers it, as with an emerald carpet. The bases of these mountains seem to rest on flowers. In the dis tance we see the Falls of the Staubbach which leaps boldy over the brow of the mountain 980 feet above us. Long before it reaches the ground, it is converted into a vast, dia phanous cloud of spray, which the breeze scat ters into thousands of fantastic wreaths Whenever the sunlight streams directly through this, the effect is marvelous. It then resembles a transparent veil of silver lace, wov en with all colors of the rainbow,fluttering from the fir-clad rocks. It recalls Goethe's des cription:
"In clouds of spray
Like silver dust,
It veils the rock
And dancing down
And dancing down
With music soft
I dislike to omit a picture of that Monarch of the Alps, Mont Blanc, which towers nearly 16,000 feet above us with its majestic snowIite mantle-but as time hastens, so must I. I would not forget to tell you of my last evening in Zermatt as I lingered in the deep. ening twilight to say farewell to this unrivaled peak. At first its clear-cut silhouete stood forth against the sky, unutterably grand, while darkness shrouded its giant form. So overwhelming appeared its tapering height, that I no longer wondered at the belief of the peasants that the gate of Paradise is situated on its summit. It appears but a step from thence to heaven.
At last there came a change. In the blue vault of heaven,the full-orbed moon came forth to sheathe the Matterhorn in silver. In that refulgent light, its icy edges looked like crysal ropes; and its sharp, glistening rocks resembled above. Never, this side the shore of eternit do I expect to see a vision so sublime as tha of moonlight on Matterhorn. For, from the gleaming parapets of this Alpine pyramid, no 40 centuries" but 40,000 ages look down o us as frivolous pygmies of a day. Yes, as gazed on this illumined obelisk, rising from out its glittering sea of ice, to where-4,00 feet above-the moving stars flashed round its summit like resplendent gems, it seemed fitting emblem of Creative Majesty-the scep. ter of Almighty God.

and gave it to the man waiting outside, telling im that she was not returning with him. A e rode away she gladly turned and walked into the house.
Her "decision" was changed. Here she wa lone in this lonely, humble abode with nothing more of cheer and comfort than it held the day efore but she was happy. She must get busy and prepare a treat for the evening meal. It would be a long time before Bert would be ming home but she must make him welcome But does he want me? What would he do, living here alone? he needed her to take care of him.
Bert and Jip stayed longer at the woods that night than usual. "There is nothing to g home for," he thought, "the evening will be too long now." All day long he dreaded tha eturn to his lonely cabin and had thought of her leaving on the train from Daron. His excuse to the boys for his tardiness to his pper was that Rowena was visiting at Daron for a few days. He strolled homeward and as e looked up at the little structure he noted hat smoke was issuing from the chimney and suddenly light streamed from the windows. His heart thumped. "Am I dreaming? Do my eyes deceive-me?" As he flung the door open the lunch pail dropped as Jip bounded for ward to greet his mistress. She looked up from her work, a deep flush overspreading her fea tures as he strode forwad, a look of surprise tures as he strode for aded, a look of pleasure and questioning on his face.

A few mornings after Jip came running in with a dark, torn, mud-covered object whict still contained a huge roll of bills. Bert and Rowena exchanged smiles and from the bottom of their hearts thanked Jip for making the better "decision".
A young wife went into a meat market and said, "I bought three or four hams here a month ago, and they were fine. Have you "ny more of them?"
"Yes, Ma'am," relied the butcher, "there are ten of those hams hanging up there now." "Well, if they are off the same pig, I'll take three of them," said the customer

An ambitious young man was being instruc ed in the art of elocution by a professor of public speaking. When the instructor had fin ished, he gave the young man one more piece of advice.
"When you have finished your lecture, bow gracefully and leave the platform on tiptoe." "Why on tiptoe?" queried the would be orator.

Divine Refreshments

"Why should this anxious load
Press down your weary mind?
Haste to your heavenly Father's throne,
And sweet refreshment find."
The words of the poet were realized by more, han one heart who than one heart who gathered for the students hour of prayer, April 5th. Miss Ruth War burton read from God's word the unfailing promise found in Rom. 8:31-39.
The testimonies and prayers showed that many are proving the power of God to be a twentiech-century motivating, transforming reality in their lives. Notice the following testimonies; detect the satisfaction that Christ gives to these as a sample of others that are not quoted. Prof. Wright-"I have registered before God, angels, and men that I'll be God's man in God's place; I will remain on God's side of every question." Miss Rickard-"The word every question." Miss Rickard-"The word salvation. Preachers of the gospel are commis sioned to preach the gospel of Peace.

"There is no peace to the wicked," but "To be spiritually minded is Peace.
The source of peace is God the Father, Christ the Son of God, and the Holy Ghost, the Comforter.
In order to have the Peace of God we must do our part. Philippians 4:8-9. If God puts a peace in our hearts, it will only stay as we keep our minds on things which are lovely and good, and as we "Think on these things." If we "think on these things," the God of Peace shall be with us.
Do you know the peace of God, and the peace from God? We must know the peace rom God then we shall have the peace of God which passech all understanding.
In the evening Miss Helen Davison had charge of the Young Peoples' service. There was no preaching service.
The Scripture lesson was taken from Isaiah 50:7, II Timothy 1:12, and Philippians $1: 6$. She said, "We fail in the Christian life because we start out with the idea of giving Christianity a trial in our lives. When we give ourselves to Jesus Christ, we give ourselves for life. Our part is to set our face oward God and we will not fail."
The testimonies were wonderfully blessed of God. His presence was real, and those who were present left the meeting feeling that God still lives and reigns in hearts today.

Baseball Track and Field Tennis With the basketball season over, once more we turn to outside athletic activities. Superfine weather has dried up the diamond and ennis courts, with a little work, the track will be ready for use. Jumping pits are to be made mmediately and with their completion the stage will be all set for a busy six weeks. Into this limited amount of time the remainder of he baseball series must be played, after which ll energies will be devoted to tack and field Following the Sixth Annual Track and Field Meet a lengthy tennis series must be played Meet a lengthy tennis series must be played, nsisting of men's singles and doubles, git ingles and doubles and mixed doubles.
Practice for baseball and track will begin immediately. Don't have to be urged to come ut to practice! Your team needs you.

Jones had bought a horse on the installment plan. A week after he had made the purchase, he drove to the dealer's stable to say that he was not entirely satisfied with the animal. "There is one thing I don't like about her," he said, "She won't hold her head up." "That's her pride," said the horsedealer "She will when she's paid for."
Lasting Value
"But this portrait makes me look so much Ider," objected Mrs. Jones.
"That's the beauty of it, madam," replied the artist. "Ten years from now it will be an even better likeness of you than it is to-day."
